

What makes a good Cover Letter?

Good Cover Letters are best written when they concisely convey who you are, what your experience brings to a company, and why you would make a good fit.

Specifically, you need to Show, don't tell. An effective way to do this is a bullet point list of your key skills that link to the job ad.

How do you “Show, Don't Tell”?

You need to show your relevancy through past achievements earned. If you have experience working within a project team then you need to explain your successes within that line of work.

Analyse the job ad for keywords and use those keywords in your Cover Letter and link them to quantifiable examples.

Hiring managers want to see your past results relevant to the role advertised. They want to find that you have done your research: on the role and the company.

Make sure to mention what specifically about the company attracts you to the role and makes you the perfect fit. It then makes it easier on the hiring manager to judge your suitability and the level of focus you've put into your application.

And remember, there is no one size fits all template for Cover Letters, so spend some time writing Cover Letters that are specific and unique. This will only place you in a better position for career success!

From worst to best

	>		>		>
--	---	--	---	--	---	--